Chicago's Black Ladies make no mistake about what they set out to do. With their brutal attack, stripped down to the point of primitive, these two noiseniks bang out some of the most ferociously raw anthems to ever resonate throughout the basements of the midwest.

Rejecting early offers from guitarists for hire, Ryan Duggan and Pat Seymour have found a way to build a wall of sound and demolish it at breakneck speed, using only drums and bowel-shattering bass riffs. Producing some of their most dynamic and cohesive work, these recordings combine undeniable melody with dizzying switch-ups and groove-heavy breakdowns, resulting in a sound akin to a battle of the bands in Bedrock.

Recorded and mixed by Mike Lust (Tight Phantomz/Lustre King) at Phantom Manor Studios, this limited edition release is pressed on swirled color vinyl with beautiful hand-screened, hand-cut packaging by Drug Factory Press.

Black Ladies have performed with Japanther, Vivian Girls, Mika Miko, (((Microwaves))), Cacaw, and Maps & Atlases and are planning extensive tours for the Spring and Summer of 2009.

Press Quotes

"These are already anthems, at The Fucking Champs' agility level...you have to move and hear where this beat and pounding bass is going. It's heavy and relentless, the stuff that could drive trucks or blast apart rocks in the quarry. No doubt they will leave countless bands starting up in their wake."

- Jason Dean - 7 Inches Every Day

"A perfect synthesis of song title and song, Black Ladies' Naked Caveman moves with the brutal force of a crazed, early man bradishing a bone club looking for a good skull to bash...bass and drums, a dirty groove, and a guttural grunt, but ask yourself, what else would a caveman do if that caveman had musical gifts and/or a big, bone club? He would probably do something that sounds like this..."
